ARTICLES AND REPORTS

"Freedom on the Net: A Global Assessment of Internet and Digital Media"

Freedom House, April 1, 2009, 126 pages.

This study of internet censorship focuses on the level of internet and mobile-phone freedom experienced by average users and activists in a sampling of 15 countries around the globe.

"Should Speech Be Restricted on the Internet?"

Daniel Solove and Nicole Wong. National Public Radio's Talk of the Nation, February 23, 2009, 9 pages.

Should there be complete and total unencumbered free speech on the internet or should there be some restrictions on images or video that contain people's private information? Should there be anonymity, the expectation that you're able to post anything, perhaps everything, with impunity? Where does one draw the line when it comes to free speech on the Internet? The authors discuss the issues around restriction of free speech on the Internet.

"Security, Openness and Privacy"

Marc Rotenberg, et al. Fourth Meeting of the Internet Governance Forum, November 15-18, 2009, 83 pages.

Access to the Internet has become much more important recently, given that billions of people use the Internet each day. Security, openness and privacy are interlinked and the key question now is how to find the right balance among the access to knowledge, freedom of expression, and protection of intellectual property rights.

"Measuring Global Public Access to ICT: Landscape Study Summary Reports from 25 Countries around the World"

Ricardo Gomez, Ed. Center for Information and Society Working Paper No. 7, May 2009, 141 pages. Understanding public access to information is particularly important in developing countries where there is often limited private access to information and communication technologies. This study examines how people around the world access and use information and computers in public settings, such as public libraries and cybercafés, covering a sampling of 25 developing countries with over 250,000 public access settings.
